The transport sector holds a central economic function in Belgium due to the country's geographical situation and its elaborated air, rail, road and water networks in combination with its experience in manufacturing vehicles and spare parts. Both private and public entities play a major role in transportation.

Large-scale infrastructure projects and related transport activities generate numerous legal issues that call for a holistic approach in terms of both private law (e.g. contract, tort and personal data) and public law (e.g. specific regulations, town planning, security, public procurement and European law, including market access).

Multidisciplinary expertise

Simont Braun provides support for public bodies, private companies and governments during all phases of their infrastructure projects, manufacturing activities and transportation services, from conception to operation. Our assistance covers negotiating and drafting contracts, supervising obtention of permits, administrative procedures and representing clients before the courts.

Our experience in this sector covers multiple dimensions including corporate, M&A, governance, real estate, intellectual property, consumer protection and other matters of general economic law.

Our firm's expertise in mobility led us to provide assistance to public authorities in the development of the future extension of the Brussels metropolitan metro line, including opinions and practical aspects regarding permits, public easements, expropriation, environmental issues, public tenders, drafting and negotiation of several contracts with private and public companies;

Our team also regularly provides assistance to railway companies and regional transport companies to tackle their real estate issues (including public law and administrative aspects), as well as matters relating to protection of employee know-how, town planning, use of CCTV data and personal data processing.
